Abstract

We introduce continuous R -valuations on directed-complete posets (dcpos, for short), as a generalization of continuous valuations in domain theory, by extending values of continuous valuations from reals to so-called Abelian d -rags R .

Like the valuation monad $\mathbf{V}$ introduced by Jones and Plotkin, we show that the construction of continuous R -valuations extends to a strong monad $\mathbf{V}^R$ on the category of dcpos and Scott-continuous maps. Additionally, and as in recent work by the two authors and C. Théron, and by the second author, B. Lindenhovius, M. Mislove and V. Zanzuliev, we show that we can extract a commutative monad $\mathbf{V}_-^R$ out of it, whose elements we call minimal R -valuations.

We also show that continuous R -valuations have close connections to measures when R is taken to be $\mathbb{IR}_+^c$, the interval domain of the extended nonnegative reals: (1) On every coherent topological space, every non-zero, bounded r -smooth measure μ (defined on the Borel σ -algebra), canonically determines a continuous $\mathbb{IR}_+^c$ -valuation; and (2) such a continuous $\mathbb{IR}_+^c$ -valuation is the most precise (in a certain sense) continuous $\mathbb{IR}_+^c$ -valuation that approximates μ , when the support of μ is a compact Hausdorff subspace of a second-countable stably compact topological space. This in particular applies to Lebesgue measure on the unit interval. As a result, the Lebesgue measure can be identified as a continuous $\mathbb{IR}_+^c$ -valuation. Additionally, we show that the latter is minimal.

Keywords: R -valuations; measures; dcpos; commutative monads.

1 Introduction

The probability of an event is most often than not understood as a real number between 0 and 1, and measures, as well as continuous valuations, take their values in $\mathbb{R}_+$, the set of non-negative real numbers extended with $+\infty$. What is there that is so special with real numbers, and can we replace $\mathbb{R}_+$ by some elements in some other structure? The question was once asked by Vincent Danos to the first author, and came back to the authors in an attempt to formulate an alternative to measures and continuous valuations with values taken as exact reals, in the sense of Real PCF [10,9,8,24] for example. Exact reals are modeled there as intervals that enclose the true value that is intended, and computation proceeds by refining these intervals further and further. Indeed, one of the points of this paper is that we can extend continuous valuations to an interval-valued form of continuous valuations, with an interval-valued integration theory. In addition, this also leads us to commutative valuations monads with intervals as values on the category of dcpos and Scott-continuous maps.

We should warn the reader that such an endeavor is probably useless for computation purposes. In the setting of type 2 theory of effectivity, Weihrauch has shown that, under reasonable assumptions, the map
