Reconciling Observations of Global Temperature Change National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Board on Atmospheric Sciences and Climate, Commission on Geosciences, Environment, and Resources, Climate Research Committee, Panel on Reconciling Temperature Observations, 2000-01-07 An overall increase in global mean atmospheric temperatures is predicted to occur in response to human induced increases in atmospheric concentrations of heat trapping greenhouse gases The most prominent of these gases carbon dioxide has increased in concentration by over 30% during the past 200 years and is expected to continue to increase well into the future Other changes in atmospheric composition complicate the picture In particular increases in the number of small particles called aerosols in the atmosphere regionally offset and mask the greenhouse effect and stratospheric ozone depletion contributes to cooling of the upper troposphere and stratosphere Many in the scientific community believe that a distinctive greenhouse warming signature is evident in surface temperature data for the past few decades Some however are puzzled by the fact that satellite temperature measurements indicate little if any warming of the lower to mid troposphere the layer extending from the surface up to about 8 km since such satellite observations first became operational in 1979 The satellite measurements appear to be substantiated by independent trend estimates for this period based on radiosonde data Some have interpreted this apparent discrepancy between surface and upper air observations as casting doubt on the overall reliability of the surface temperature record whereas others have concluded that the satellite data or the algorithms that are being used to convert them into temperatures must be erroneous It is also conceivable that temperatures at the earth's surface and aloft have not tracked each other perfectly because they have responded differently to natural and or human induced climate forcing during this particular 20 year period Whether these differing temperature trends can be reconciled has implications for assessing how much the earth has warmed during the past few decades whether observed changes are in accord with the predicted response to the buildup of greenhouse gases in the atmosphere based on model simulations and whether the existing atmospheric observing system is adequate for the purposes of monitoring global mean temperature This report reassesses the apparent differences between the temperature changes recorded by satellites and the surface thermometer network on the basis of the latest available information It also offers an informed opinion as to how the different temperature records should be interpreted and recommends actions

Burke, 2020-04-07 This book explores how individuals and communities perceive and understand climate change using their observations of change in the world around them Because processes of climatic change operate at spatial and temporal scales that differ from those of everyday practice the phenomenon can be difficult to understand However flora and fauna which are important natural and cultural resources for human communities do respond to the pressures of environmental change Humans in turn observe and adapt to those responses even when they may not understand their causes Much of the discussion about human experiences of our changing climate centers on disasters and extreme events but we argue that a focus on the everyday on the microexperiences of change has the advantage of revealing how people see feel and make sense of climate change in their own lives The chapters of this book are drawn from Asia Europe Africa and South and North America They use ethnographic inquiry to understand local knowledge and perceptions of climate change and the social and ecological changes inextricably intertwined with it Together they illustrate the complex process of coming to know climate change show some of the many ways that climate change and our responses to it inflict violence and point to promising avenues for moving toward just and authentic collaborative responses
