Edelstein, Troelstra, 2001 The principal goal of Clinical Geropsychology was to assemble the contributions of a group of international experts whose work has focused on the psychology of aging and the field of clinical geropsychology The chapters in this volume survey many of the significant contributions to our knowledge of the mental health problems of older adults their clinical assessment and the empirical support for our clinical interventions In 1900 the average life expectancy in the USA was 49 years There was relatively little need at that time for a psychology of aging much less a clinical psychology of aging That situation has dramatically changed over the past century and will continue to do so for many years Today adults 65 years of age and older comprise approximately 12 7% of the US population With increasing age come increased risks of physical health problems and the field of clinical geropsychology continues to evolve as more researchers and clinicians begin to address the mental health needs of our increasing older adult population Clinical Geropsychology examines the emerging field of clinical psychology beginning with a review of this area of research presenting important epidemiological information The volume then offers a detailed look at issues that range from analyzing physiological and cognitive aspects to cognitive changes and specific neurological disorders common among older adults Specific topics covered include sexuality bereavement anxiety substance abuse and schizophrenia Each chapter presents a summary of clinical research and its practical application Voids in the knowledge base are also noted along with recommendations for the direction of future investigations The volume also addresses management problems such as incontinence wandering and aggressive behavior and reviews the various mental health care systems available in different countries Clinical Geropsychology was previously published as Volume 7 of the highly acclaimed major reference work Comprehensive Clinical Psychology the single most comprehensive source of information in the field of Clinical Psychology Clinical Geropsychology Inger Hilde Nordhus, 1998-01-01 This volume on clinical geropsychology provides an overview of the field Theoretical chapters are included on the social developmental cognitive personality and also appeal to other health professionals including psychiatrists social workers and mental health nurses who work with older people It is a valuable resource for trainee geriatric mental health workers because it highlights key readings and important practice implications in the field A Handbook of Geriatric Neuropsychology Shane S. Knight,Nancy A. Pachana,2015-01-08 Due to improvements in health and healthcare the elderly population is expanding rapidly within the developed world However more and more elderly people require some form of psychological support at some point in their later years The types of problems faced by this population are quite distinct and often more complex than those faced by younger adults and throw up many new challenges in both assessment and treatment Though there are books available that focus individually on assessment or treatment few have combined the two into a single framework Within this book Knight and Pachana argue that psychological assessment needs to be more tightly integrated with therapy especially with older adult clients Using the Contextual Adult Lifespan Theory for Adapting Psychotherapy CALTAP as a framework for applying our knowledge about developmental social contextual and cohort generational factors that influence age differences in response to psychological assessment and therapy they present an integrated framework for psychological assessment and therapy with older adults This text is valuable for practitioners looking for a solid theoretical basis for the practice of assessment and therapy with older clients students in graduate courses looking at later lifespan issues and educators looking for material to enhance generalist psychotherapy courses with a lifespan perspective
