Fossils

Fossils are the remains or evidence of animals or plants which have been preserved naturally. They range from the skeletons of huge dinosaurs to tiny formed from the hard parts of animals and plants such as shells, bones, teeth or replacements. They may be virtually unchanged from the originals, or be mineral amber, the resin of ancient trees. Eggs, footprints and burrows can be fossilized too.

The study of fossils, called palaeontology, shows us that life originated on Earth at least 3,500 million years ago. Since then there has been a succession of animal and plant species. Most are now extinct and only a tiny proportion have survived as fossils. Animals and plants have also been preserved in peat, tar, ice and of ancient life on Earth.

The process of changing from a living organism to a fossil takes place over millions of years. Fossilization is an extremely chancy process. As soon as the shells, bones, and teeth of animals, or the wood of plants, last longer than soft tissue but they are often scattered by animals, wind or flowing water, then decomposes. This is most likely to be done by sediment like sand or mud washed down by water. Some fossils later dissolve; others may be changed chemically or be distorted due to high temperatures and pressures. Only a tiny fraction will survive to be found.
