

3. Exposure meter - most new cameras have several types of metering systems - they all measure light reaching your digital sensor. The choices include: 1) multi-segment also called Matrix, evaluative, or honeycomb 2) Center weighted and 3) spot meter. Spot metering is used in difficult lighting or backlit situations and requires the most skill to use properly. I recommend you set your camera to use Matrix metering most of the time (i.e. 99% of the time).

4. The Histogram feature is used to evaluate exposure particularly in bright light outdoors. The graph simply indicates how much light is reaching the sensor. The left side of the graph indicates underexposure and the right side indicates overexposure. The center of the graph indicates proper exposure. The histogram is a useful tool for evaluating exposure and for adjusting exposure settings. The histogram is a graph of the number of pixels in an image that fall into each of the 256 possible brightness levels. The x-axis represents brightness, from black (0) to white (255). The y-axis represents the number of pixels. The histogram is a useful tool for evaluating exposure and for adjusting exposure settings.
