Creating a Dichotomous Key

If you find an insect you have never seen before, how could you discover its identity? Many field guides help you match up the characteristics of your specimen with those of similar organisms using a dichotomous key. This identification key uses a series of paired comparisons to sort organisms into smaller and smaller groups. In this investigation, you will learn how to make your own keys to identification.

Pre-lab Questions

- What characteristics do all insects have in common?
- Name two characteristics that scientists use to tell different insects apart.

Problem

How do you make a dichotomous key?

Prediction

Predict which characteristics of insects will be most useful in creating an identification key.

Materials

illustration of 18 beetles paper
sample dichotomous keys
pencil

Procedure

1. Copy the diagram of a dichotomous tree shown here onto a separate piece of paper.

2. Study the illustration of 18 beetles shown on the next page.
3. Select one characteristic and sort the beetles into two groups based on whether they have the characteristic or not.
4. List each beetle's number under either Group 1 or Group 2 on your diagram.
5. Record the characteristic that identifies each group.
6. Select another characteristic of each subgroup, and repeat steps 4 and 5 for the next level down on your diagram.
7. Continue to subdivide the groups until you have 18 groups with one beetle in each.
