Chapter 18

Our Urbanizing World

- As of 2007, a majority of the world's population lives in urban areas
 - The shift of population into towns and cities is called urbanization
- Urbanization began when increased agricultural production and accelerated during the industrial revolution

Industrialization has driven urbanization

- Developed countries have slower rates of urbanization due to higher rates of people living in suburbs, the smaller communities that ring cities
- Urbanization is faster in developing countries, particularly those facing war and ecological degradation

Environmental factors influence the location of urban areas

- Most urban areas are suited near a major river, a sea coast, railroad, or highway - some corridor for trade that has driven economic growth
- Dallas-Fort Worth area prospers from oil-fueled transportation through interstate highways and in international airport
 - This area, like other western and southern U.S. metropolitan areas, has experienced rapid growth

People have moved to suburbs

- In the 19th and 20th centuries, economic activity forced many people to remain in cities
