Notes - Color Vision

Color Vision

We perceive color because the cone receptors in the retina of the human eye are sensitive only to wavelengths approximately between 400 nm and 700 nm. These cone receptors are sensitive approximately between 400 nm and 700 nm. These cone receptors are sensitive approximately between 400 nm and 700 nm. These cone receptors are sensitive approximately between 400 nm and 700 nm.

Additive Color Mixing

Additive color mixing is the kind of mixing in which one or more lights of different colors are added together. The colors of the lights are added together to produce a new color. For example, if you add red and green lights together, you get yellow. If you add red and blue lights together, you get magenta. If you add green and blue lights together, you get cyan. If you add all three colors together, you get white.

Subtractive Color Mixing

Subtractive color mixing is the kind of mixing in which one or more colors are subtracted from a mixture of colors. The colors of the lights are subtracted from the mixture to produce a new color. For example, if you subtract red from white, you get cyan. If you subtract green from white, you get magenta. If you subtract blue from white, you get yellow. If you subtract all three colors from white, you get black.

1. Additive Color

In the right pane of the simulation for the simulation click on the Additive Color button.

The theory of color vision is based on the experimental observation that mixing the three additive primary colors of light produces most other colors. What are the primary colors of light?

Red, Green and Blue

Now focus all light of the additive primary colors are projected on top of each other, different colors are produced. This is called the additive method of color production.

A color of light that the person can make the three primary colors are mixed in a ratio.

What color of light does the person see when the three primary colors are mixed all?

Now all light made by mixing one of the three additive primary colors is equal, produce the additive secondary colors. The three secondary colors are produced by mixing all of the pairs of additive primary colors of light. For each color in the table below, the color must be set to red and the other two colors must be turned off.

Primary Colors	Secondary Colors	Secondary Colors
Red	Green	Blue
Blue	Red	Yellow
Green	Blue	Magenta

Now make charts for the additive secondary colors. Now try to make the following by the amount of each additive primary color. This is done by setting the color for a chart. Estimate the amount of each color as a percentage.
