These measurements in this unusual water body (Fig. 19.10), indicate a sharp drop in the pH of the water and a corresponding increase in conductivity as water from the atmosphere is introduced into the lake. (pH values are determined from the slight conductivity effect of carbonic acid which forms in the atmosphere.) The dissolved CO_2 in the water is approximately 1.5% of the total dissolved solids and the temperature is about 10°C. The water is very soft and the pH is about 6.5.
