

CS 1110 Final Exam Solutions May 15th, 2014The Important First Question:

1. [2 points] When allowed to begin, write your last name, first name, and Cornell NetID at the top of each page. Solution: Always do this! It prevents disaster in cases where a staple fails.
2. [4 points] Objects. Consider the following code (doestrings omitted for exam brevity, line numbers added for reference).

```
1 class Prof(object):
2     def __init__(self, n):
3         self.lname = n
4
5     ljl2 = Prof("Schlee")
6     srm2 = Prof("Schmarschner")
7
8     lecturingprof = srm2
9     lecturingprof.wise = True
10    lecturingprof = ljl2
11    print "Is Prof " + srm2.lname + " wise? " + str(srm2.wise)
12    print "Is Prof " + ljl2.lname + " wise? " + str(ljl2.wise)
```

List all output and/or errors that would be generated by running this code, in the order they are produced. For each thing you write, indicate what line number produces it.

In the case of errors, it suffices to explain what the problem is — you don't know have to know precisely what Python would call the error or print out.

Hint: line 9 does not cause an error. It would be wise (ha!) to understand why before proceeding; what does Python always do when asked to assign to a variable that doesn't exist?

Solution:

line 11: Is Prof Schmarschner wise? True

Traceback (most recent call last):

```
File "/Users/llee/classes/call110/repo/Exams/final/alias.py", line 12, in <module>
    print "Is Prof " + ljl2.lname + " wise? " + str(ljl2.wise)
AttributeError: 'Prof' object has no attribute 'wise'

+2: right output for line 11. This requires understanding string concatenation and that `srm2.lname` should be "Schmarschner" (1 point), and understanding that `str(srm2.wise)` would be "True"

+2: A description of the right error for line 12. Does not have to have the exact name of the error, but has to recognize that the object referred to by `ljl2` does not have a "wise" attribute. No credit for answer saying that `ljl2` does not have an `lname` attribute.
