For the purpose of this study, the authors used a sample of 1000 respondents from the 2008 Survey of the Health of the Nation's Teachers (SHNT) to represent the population of teachers in the United States. The SHNT is a national survey of teachers' health and well-being, conducted by the American Psychological Association (APA) and the National Education Association (NEA). The survey includes a variety of questions related to teachers' physical and mental health, stress, and work-life balance. The authors used a random sample of 1000 teachers from the SHNT database to represent the population of teachers in the United States. The sample was stratified by state and by years of experience to ensure that the sample was representative of the population. The authors used a variety of statistical methods to analyze the data, including descriptive statistics, correlation analysis, and regression analysis. The results of the study are presented in the following sections.
