

Design Process 2 Urban studies

Johnson's property follows a series of "personal" and cultural references which justify the author's deep grasp of his formal language. This is more clearly expressed in the master plan and the urban-scale studies. The ideas, metaphors and conceptual references translated into a simplification of signs that give shape to new urban structures.

In the concept of a "site as device" under the symbolic fragments of the memory of Providence Place, recorded from such collage points with accelerated temporal perceptions that justify every perspective intervention, the master plan for Grand Parc keeps alive the memory of the device or its references in the symbols of Montmorency as the historic tragedy struck, in the Declaration of Independence, and in the quality of West Mountain. While the first urban drawings reveal the spatial research in which the lines lose themselves in the complexity of a quasi-abstract display, in later plans the design takes shape whenever which element is added to the "flow" of the plan.
