Nancy Rice • Elizabeth Drame

Laura Owens • Elise M. Frattura

As students with disabilities increasingly spend instructional time in general education classrooms, more and more special educators are working there as well. Through interviews and classroom observations, we found that effective special education co-teachers share certain characteristics: professionalism, the ability to articulate and model instruction to meet student needs, the ability to accurately assess student progress, the ability to analyze teaching/teaching styles, the ability to work with a wide range of students, and a vested interest in course content.

Much has been written about collaboration and co-teaching in secondary settings, including the importance of understanding your partner's teaching approach (Keefe, Moore, & Duff, 2004; Murawski, 2003); determining readiness to co-teach (Bradley, King-Sears & Tessier-Swittick, 1997; Murawski); clarifying roles, responsibilities, and expectations (Friend & Bursuck, 2002; Murawski & Dieker, 2004; Murray, 2004); scheduling shared planning time (Friend & Cook, 2002); and effective communication, including constructive dialogue and conflict resolution (Wood, 1998).

The Individuals With Disabilities Education Improvement Act of 2004 (IDEA 2004) underscores what the No Child Left Behind Act (NCLB) and IDEA 1997 mandated: instruction in special education must be tied as closely as possible to the general education curriculum. Under NCLB, students with disabilities are now required to take content area exams; student success is increasingly dependent upon effective co-teaching in general education classrooms.

IDEA 2004's definition of "highly qualified special education teacher" in the secondary school setting incorporates both special education certification and demonstration of content knowledge. In addition, the definition specifically addresses special education teachers who provide "consultative services" to content-area teachers. In these instances, the technical expertise of the special educator (rather than core content knowledge) is deemed critical (National Education Association, n.d.). The assumption in both cases is that special educators will go into a general education classroom, size up the situation in terms of student needs and content delivery, and make relevant, concrete suggestions that will aid student understanding, retention, and/or application of concepts. Are there particular skills and attributes that aid special educators in co-teaching or consultative situations?

What Do Teachers Say About Co-Teaching?

As part of a larger study, we investigated how a K-12 district was able to sustain a policy of inclusive education for a 12-year period. We conducted focus group and individual interviews with general and special educators (all of whom had been involved in co-teaching situations), as well as classroom observations of these teachers in action (see box, "About the Study"). Both special and general educators stressed the importance of co-teaching for sustaining inclusive practices; they also provided examples of what was helpful to them in a co-teaching situation.

In addition, all of the authors are former special educators in secondary settings; one of us is a former mentor to special educators, and two of us have worked in special education administration. All of us currently work in preparing professionals—teachers or administrators—to work in schools. Our experiences include urban, suburban, and rural schools. From the literature and our own experience, we know that support for teaming varies widely among school districts and buildings, from clear administrative support for co-teaching to separate case loads and a lack of physical proximity. However, we have seen co-teachers succeed in a variety of contexts. Naturally, teaming is easier when supports such as shared planning time are intentionally scheduled, but even in those instances, not every teacher is necessarily on board
