

- The course further provides students with an opportunity to understand how foreign intervention in Africa was responsible to colonial challenges. Some of the colonial legacies are some responsible for post-colonial challenges that Africa is facing even today. Hence, the call would be “addressing African problems, using African solutions.”

Foundation of African knowledge and culture

- Foundation of African knowledge and culture can be traced back to the origins of human species in Africa. It has to be acknowledged from the onset that there has been a tendency to argue that African knowledge and culture was/is unprogressive and backward. As such, Western knowledge systems have been peddled as the “ideal” one.
- Foundation of African knowledge and culture; evolving from Africa, not a borrowed phenomenon
- In about two and half million years ago, the earliest human species, who were Africans, initiated technology and intellectual search for food security. Originated with tool-making - a technological driver of development. The tool industry later on spread to the Middle East, Europe and the rest part of
