

NYC DOE Framework for Teaching: Danielson Rubric

	INEFFECTIVE	DEVELOPING	EFFECTIVE	HIGHLY EFFECTIVE
1.1C The teacher displays knowledge of content in the discipline.	In planning and practice, the teacher makes use of content knowledge but seems to view content as a static body of facts. The teacher displays little understanding of how specific knowledge impacts on students' learning of the content. The teacher displays little concern and interest in the ways of pedagogy that a particular content is made an learning of the content.	The teacher is familiar with the important concepts in the discipline, but displays a lack of awareness of how these concepts relate to particular content. The teacher understands content as a static body of facts, although such knowledge may be used well in instruction. The teacher's plans and practice reflect a limited range of pedagogy that a particular content is made an learning of the discipline or to the students.	The teacher displays solid knowledge of the important concepts in the discipline and how these relate to content. The teacher displays some awareness and understanding of how specific content relates to learning. The teacher's plans and practice reflect familiarity with a wider range of effective pedagogy that a particular content is made an learning of the discipline and the ability to anticipate student misconceptions.	The teacher displays extensive knowledge of the important concepts in the discipline and how these relate to content and to particular topics. The teacher demonstrates wide understanding of how specific content relates to learning and makes the link to necessary pedagogical strategies that are most effective in understanding. The teacher's plans and practice reflect familiarity with a wide range of effective pedagogy that a particular content is made an learning of the discipline and the ability to anticipate student misconceptions.
1.2C The teacher understands instructional practices.	Learning activities are poorly aligned with the instructional purposes, do not follow a sequential progression, are not designed to engage students in learning, intellectual activity and have a monotone, low effectiveness, unvarying nature or contribute little to the activities and offer little variety.	Some of the learning activities and tasks are aligned with instructional purposes and represent meaningful learning challenges, but with no different student benefits or outcomes. Instructional groups generally support the activities, with some variety. The teacher or unit has a strong visible structure, but the progression of activities is unvarying, with only minor variations in the activities.	Most of the learning activities are aligned with the instructional purposes and follow a sequential progression suitable to groups of students. The learning activities have some visible structure, they represent an effective progression of learning, with some differentiation for different groups of students and varied use of instructional groups.	The progression of learning activities follows a robust structure, is aligned to instructional groups, and is designed to engage students in high level cognitive activity. There are appropriate differentiation for individual learners. Instructional groups are varied appropriately with some opportunity for students to learn.
2.1C Creating an environment of respect and support.	Relationships between interactions, both between a teacher and students and among students, are generally negative, unproductive, or have no clear benefits and/or goals, cultural learning needs, and if students feel little. Student interactions are characterized by negative, put-down, or conflict. The teacher does not deal with all inappropriate behavior.	Relationships between interactions, both between a teacher and students and among students, are generally appropriate but may reflect occasional inappropriate, disruptive, or damaging for students' goals, behaviors, and development and little. Students rarely demonstrate appropriate behavior. The teacher may begin to respond to inappropriate behavior with some results. The majority of the interactions is neutral, unvarying neither positive nor conflict.	Relationships between interactions are friendly and the interactions are positive and respectful. Such interactions are appropriate to the age, culture, and development needs of the students, with outcomes among students are generally positive and respectful, and students exhibit respect for the teacher. The teacher responds successfully to inappropriate behavior among students. The majority of the interactions is positive, respectful and harmonious, though students may be aware when students who are taking informal roles.	Classroom interactions between the teacher and students and among students are highly respectful, reflecting genuine warmth, caring, and sensitivity to students' individual needs. Students exhibit respect for the teacher and contribute to high level of civility among all students in the class. The unit is well known to students and all students feel valued and a comfortable learning environment.
2.2C Managing student behavior.	There appears to be inconsistent standards of conduct, or students in the classroom. There is little or no focus on monitoring of students' learning and/or progress to students' behavior in comparison and some potential students aligning.	Standards of conduct appear to have been established, but their implementation is inconsistent. The teacher takes, with some results, no consistent action in behavior of response to students' misbehavior.	Standards of conduct are generally appropriate. The teacher monitors student behavior against established standards of conduct. Teacher response to students' misbehavior is consistent, appropriate, and respectful to students and is effective.	Standards of conduct are consistently appropriate. Students take an active role in monitoring their own behavior and for their efforts. Students appear to understand and act on it. Teacher monitoring of student behavior is subtle and persistent. The teacher's response to student misbehavior is sensitive to individual student needs and respects students' dignity.
