In addition to the presence of external differences from women, Futanari's male genitalia also have characteristics that distinguish them from men's. The penis and testicles are more developed than men, generally. Men typically produce 80 million to 300 million sperm a day in their testicles, while hermaphrodites produce about 8 billion to 20 billion sperm per day.

Moreover, the penis length is 7 to 15 cm longer than the average male, so it can be said that most futanari are larger than men.

By the way, mine is about 36cm long, which is slightly bigger than average~

However, since there are large individual differences in this area, there are some futanari who are smaller than men!
