The steering system is a lost velocity steering type and uses hydraulic oil for its operation. Oil flow through the steering system is slowed when the steering wheel is turned. The flow through the steering gear is varied by the priority valve, which then allows additional oil flow to the steering system.

Hydraulic oil is pulled from hydraulic tank (12) through a filter to hydraulic pump (11). The pump sends the oil through line (4) to priority valve (3). When the steering unit is in full/turn, position, pressure in line (10) and the priority valve internal sensing the flow. When the pressure rises more than load sensing signal tank (13) the priority valve redirecting liquid flow to stop oil flow to the steering unit. Oil flow goes off to the hydraulic control valve.

When the steering gear is reeved, all water is flow to steering cylinder (B). The pressure in flow (B) and the priority valve internal sensing line with stops. As pressure stops in these lines, the priority valve metering spool will shift to meet the flow demand. As the metering spool shifts, more oil flow is directed to flow (B) than to flow (A). The priority valve metering spool will shift back and forth to meet the steering flow demand while maintaining the Load Sensing Pressure between both control lines (B) and the priority valve internal sensing line. At times flow to flow (B) will be almost complete. The combination of flow between A and B and using spring in the priority valve metering spool will keep the valve in the center.

There were also 15 in the flooring unit to prevent all the work to priority value (3), which could cause a further risk of the flooring work.

The chimney will have two main sections: a lower section (a) and a part of the chimney section (b). These two sections were together to make up the chimney section.

(Lift from the priority value across the steering left through rear (5) into the control section. When the steering wheel is turned, the control section sends the id to and from the steering section, and also to and from the steering column)

The rotating section is a small hydraulic pump. It rotates the oil that goes to the steering cylinder. The steering wheel is turned faster, there is an increase in the flow of oil to the steering cylinder. This increased flow causes the steering cylinder to move faster and faster. As the steering cylinder moves faster, more oil can flow from the rotating section to the steering cylinder and a faster turn is made.

When the steering wheels are turned for a right turn, pump 49 flows into the STEERING CYLINDER 44 through inlet (3) and passage (74). From passage (74), it goes into the piston through passage (77), into the steering wheel turning, piston (78), to turning and pumping 45. The lateral flow comes out through passage (75), where it is directed out to the steering cylinder through right left port (76). When the steering wheel started to turn, spool (79), pin (80), and drive (73) also started to turn. Spools (80) do not start to turn at the same time as the spool because the diameter of the holes in the sleeve are slightly larger than the diameter of pin (80). The sleeve spool (79) is turn inside of sleeve (80), enough to put the small holes in sleeve (80) in line with the grooves in spool (79). The alignment of the small holes in the sleeve with the grooves in the spool provides the path for oil flow to piston (78) and also to the steering cylinder. Centering springs (81) are compressed when the spool moves in relation to the sleeve. When the steering wheels no longer turning, the springs oil only the spool and sleeve back to a full 0° turn position. This means that the wheels will stay in the position they were in when the steering effort stopped. The steering wheel when it turned in the opposite direction to bring the wheels back to straight ahead, it is make a left turn. As the material oil goes out to the cylinder through hole (71) for a right turn, return oil from the cylinder is coming back into the STEERING CYLINDER through inlet (72). This oil is used to the turn
