

Electronic and manual record keeping

While some business owners prefer manual record keeping systems, most businesses use an electronic record keeping system — making it easier to capture information, generate reports and meet tax and legal reporting requirements.

There are a number of issues you should consider when setting up an electronic or manual record keeping system, as each has certain advantages and limitations.

Electronic record keeping

Most businesses use accounting software programs to simplify electronic record keeping, and produce meaningful reports. There are many other advantages to using electronic record keeping, as listed below.

Advantages

- Helps you record business transactions, including income and expenses, payments to workers, and stock and asset details.
- Efficient way to keep financial records and requires less storage space.
- Provides the option of recording a sale when you raise an invoice, not when you receive a cash payment from a client.
- Easy to generate orders, invoices, debtor reports, financial statements, employee pay records, inventory reports.
- Automatically tallies amounts and provides reporting functions.
- Keeps up with the latest tax rates, tax laws and rulings.
- Many accounting programs have facilities to email invoices to clients, orders to suppliers, or BAS returns to the Australian Taxation Office.
- Allows you to back up records and keep them in a safe place in case of fire or theft.

Choosing accounting software

Your business may require more than one software program to meet all of your tax and legal needs, so it's important to:

- seek advice from your accountant or financial adviser before purchasing software for record keeping
- check which accounting software is tax compliant on the Australian Taxation Office website.
