Couching

Basic couching is used to outline a design. To start, bring up desired number of last yarns at right. Use left thumb to hold and guide last yarn as you couch over them. Working yarn up at 1 last yarn, insert at 2 last yarns, insert at 3 last yarns, and so on, couching along the line. At the point 1 for next row, couch over the last row until last yarns are securely anchored. Between stitches, use hands or needle to secure.

This group of stitches, known as couching, are particularly useful in large designs, are particularly useful in outlining an area or in doing over two working yarns. The last row (back row) is one or more strands of couching yarn. The couching yarn is stitched over the last yarn and is the fabric. Often the last yarn and the couching yarn are of contrasting colors. The actual yarn are of contrasting colors. The specific effect of couching varies with the number of strands of couching yarn that are used. The more strands you lay down, the heavier the outline. Experiment to determine how many strands should be laid.
