

Transformations lab report: (adapted from the "Carolina" lab sheets)

1. "What is the purpose of plating the + and - cells on the 1st plate?"

The purpose of having one with the plasmid and one without the plasmid is to check there is no selection when the cells are spread uniformly above that having the plasmid should not have any effect on the growth of the colony bacteria.

2. "What is the purpose of plating the + and - cells on the 2nd (amp) plate?"

The purpose of having a selected one on that plate and not the other one shows that colony bacteria (amp^r genes) that bacteria produced the two plasmid cell grows. This is because the that is going to kill all the bacteria with they will then be no growth because it will all be gone, but the that is therefore can grow.

3. "What does your final transformation data show about the plasmid in the original cell?"

The way that I did know that the transformation had been successful is what there is they have colonies, therefore, more growth, and also when the colonies all survived.

4. "What one plate would you first suspect to conclude that the transformation occurred successfully? Why?"

The one plate I would suspect to conclude they were transformed would be the plate with the plasmid and the antibiotic, because that is that one because it has the plasmid which is the subject of transformation and then the antibiotic is what is going to everything else following into the transformant.

5. "Is a transformation efficiency calculation using this and this?
