International Handbook of Interpretation in Educational Research Paul Smeyers, David Bridges, Nicholas C. Burbules, Morwenna Griffiths, 2015-01-06 This handbook focuses on the often neglected dimension of interpretation in educational research It argues that all educational research is in some sense interpretive and that understanding this issue belies some usual dualisms of thought and practice such as the sharp dichotomy between qualitative and quantitative research Interpretation extends from the very framing of the research task through the sources which constitute the data the process of their recording representation and analysis to the way in which the research is finally or provisionally presented The thesis of the handbook is that interpretation cuts across the fields both philosophically organizationally and methodologically By covering a comprehensive range of research approaches and methodologies the handbook gives early career researchers what they need to know in order to decide what particular methods can offer for various educational research contexts fields An extensive overview includes concrete examples of different kinds of research not limited for example to teaching and learning examples as present in the Anglo Saxon tradition but including as well what in the German Continental tradition is labelled pädagogisch examples from child rearing and other contexts of non formal education with full description and explanation of why these were chosen in particular circumstances and reflection on the wisdom or otherwise of the choice combined in each case with consideration of the role of interpretation in the process The handbook includes examples of a large number of methods traditionally classified as qualitative interpretive and quantitative used across the area of the study of education Examples are drawn from across the globe thus exemplifying the different opportunities and constraints that educational research has to confront in different societies

Secular Conversions Damon Mayrl, 2016-08-30 Why does secularization proceed differently in otherwise similar countries Secular Conversions demonstrates that the institutional structure of the state is a key factor shaping the course of secularization Drawing upon detailed historical analysis of religious education policy in the United States and Australia Damon Mayrl details how administrative structures legal procedures and electoral systems have shaped political opportunities and even helped create constituencies for secular policies In so doing he also shows how a decentralized readily accessible American state acts as an engine for religious conflict encouraging religious differences to spill into law and politics at every turn This book provides a vivid picture of how political conflicts interacted with the state over the long span of American and Australian history to shape religion's role in public life Ultimately it reveals that taken for granted political structures have powerfully shaped the fate of religion in modern societies

Schools and Screens Victoria Cain, 2024-02-06 Why screens in schools from film screenings to instructional television to personal computers did not bring about the educational revolution promised by reformers Long before Chromebook giveaways and remote learning screen media technologies were enthusiastically promoted by American education reformers Again and again as schools deployed film screenings television programs and computer games screen based learning was touted as a cure for all educational ills But the transformation promised by advocates for screens in schools never happened In this book Victoria Cain chronicles important episodes in the history of educational technology as reformers technocrats public television producers and computer scientists tried to harness the power of screen based media to shape successive generations of students Cain describes how beginning in the 1930s champions of educational technology saw screens in schools as essential tools for training citizens and presented films to that end Among the films screened for educational purposes was the notoriously racist Birth of a Nation In the 1950s and 1960s both technocrats and leftist educators turned to screens to prepare young Americans for Cold War citizenship and from the 1970s through the 1990s as commercial television and personal computers arrived in classrooms screens in schools represented an increasingly privatized vision of schooling and civic engagement Cain argues that the story of screens in schools is not simply about efforts to develop the right technological tools rather it reflects ongoing tensions over citizenship racial politics private funding and distrust of teachers Ultimately she shows that the technologies that reformers had envisioned as improving education and training students in civic participation in fact deepened educational inequities
