systematically examines some of the key issues involved in the care of those with chronic diseases. It synthesises the evidence on what we know works or does not in different circumstances. From an international perspective it addresses the prerequisites for effective policies and management of chronic disease. Living Well with Chronic Illness: Committee on Living Well with Chronic Disease: Public Action to Reduce Disability and Improve Functioning and Quality of Life, Board on Population Health and Public Health Practice, Institute of Medicine, 2011-05-30. In the United States, chronic diseases currently account for 70 percent of all deaths and close to 48 million Americans report a disability related to a chronic condition. Today, about one in four Americans have multiple diseases, and the prevalence and burden of chronic disease in the elderly and racial/ethnic minorities are notably disproportionate. Chronic disease has now emerged as a major public health problem, and it threatens not only population health but our social and economic welfare. Living Well with Chronic Disease identifies the population-based public health actions that can help reduce disability and improve functioning and quality of life among individuals who are at risk of developing a chronic disease and those with one or more diseases. The book recommends that all major federally funded programmatic and research initiatives in health include an evaluation on health-related quality of life and functional status. Also, the book recommends increasing support for implementation research on how to disseminate effective long-term lifestyle interventions in community-based settings that improve living well with chronic disease. Living Well with Chronic Disease uses three frameworks and considers diseases such as heart disease and stroke, diabetes, depression, and respiratory problems. The book's recommendations will inform policy makers concerned with health reform in public and private sectors and also managers of community-based and public health intervention programs, private and public research funders, and patients living with one or more chronic conditions.
