A d20 Modern Sourcebook Fortress

Requires the use of the d20 Modern™ Roleplaying Game, published by Wizards of the Coast, Inc.

Introduction:

Along England's south-eastern coast lies a line of fortresses built to defend against an invasion that never came. Costing the equivalent of billions of today's dollars, these fixed fortifications are a shrine to the way wars used to be fought.

Spanning France's eastern border, from the Ardennes in the North to the Alps in the South, are the remains of the vaunted Maginot Line. Built from 1929 to 1940, the series of gun emplacements, pill-boxes, forts, and underground barracks represented the pinnacle of modern military fortification. However, in May of 1940, the German army invaded France from the Ardennes in Belgium, and simply bypassed the world's greatest fortress.

On June 6, 1944, the Allied forces breached and ultimately overran Hitler's Fortress Europa in a combined airborne and sea borne invasion. This despite the fact that the coastal defenses at Normandy had been designed and overseen by two of the era's finest soldiers, Erwin Rommel and Heinz Guderian, and manned by one of the best armies ever to be fielded by any nation in history.

The above examples illustrate how modern warfare has changed to render fixed fortifications and defensive structures less impregnable than the castles and walled cities of the ancient past. With the advent of gunpowder, walls had to become thicker and stronger, costing much more to build. As armies became more mechanized, static lines of defense became much less secure, facing the threat of being outflanked and enveloped. With the introduction of combat aircraft to the battlefield, forts had to seek cover under ground, reducing their symbolism of territorial control and martial power. Finally, as the shells and bombs became bigger and more destructive, the realization came that no fortress, no matter how strong, and well-defended could ultimately stand against a well-equipped and tenacious adversary.

That said, any soldier worth his salt will tell you that any cover is better than no cover at all. It is for this reason that fortified buildings are still designed and built, and that older structures are retro-fitted and strengthened to better stand against modern warfare. It
