Abstract: Domestic violence, a pervasive and deeply concerning issue, continues to cast a long shadow over societies worldwide, with developing countries facing unique challenges in addressing this problem. This paper delves into the complex landscape of domestic violence in developing nations, aiming to scrutinize its current state, summarize research findings, and explore various theoretical perspectives to better comprehend the underlying dynamics. The multifaceted examination encompasses an elucidation of fundamental concepts related to domestic violence, a delineation of the specific human rights infringed upon by this scourge, a comprehensive evaluation of the existing situation in developing nations, and a discussion of viable solutions to mitigate this crisis. Ultimately, this research aims to create a comprehensive framework for understanding and addressing domestic violence in developing countries. By thoroughly exploring its various facets, we hope to provide insights that will contribute to the development of more effective intervention strategies and the safeguarding of the rights and well-being of women who are disproportionately affected by this issue, particularly in developing nations where unique challenges demand special attention and action.

Keywords: Feminism, Domestic Violence, Legislation

1. Introduction

Domestic violence is an urgent global concern that transcends geographical boundaries and socioeconomic disparities. It is a pervasive problem that continues to plague societies, with women disproportionately bearing its physical, emotional, and psychological burdens. This research seeks to shed light on the pressing issue of domestic violence, particularly within the context of developing countries, where it often remains underreported and insufficiently addressed.

Throughout the history of feminism movement, one of the major goals is always to fight for "space" for woman, in which the right to have an available and safe of private space is included. However, the truth is that domestic violence still exists across the globe, leading to increasing deaths, public crimes, and psychological issues. As per the World Health Organization's data, worldwide, one out of every three women experiences domestic violence. However, there is a scarcity of current and comprehensive research on domestic violence in developing nations [1]. However, there have been indications that domestic violence may be more prevailed in specific global south countries.

The primary objective of this research is to shed light on the severity of domestic violence in developing countries. By investigating its causes and consequences, the research seeks to not only
