1. The effect of different treatment like increasing the number of iterations and a hierarchical approach on the performance of algorithms are investigated in the framework of some applications.
2. An evaluation, based on different criteria, has been performed. Specifically, the number of iterations and the number of nodes are considered.
3. The effect of the number of iterations on the performance of the algorithms is investigated.

Abstract: The purpose of this study was to determine if there were differences in the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease between two groups of men who had been exposed to asbestos. One group consisted of men who had worked in an asbestos vermiculite mine and the other group consisted of men who had worked in a vermiculite mine that did not contain asbestos. The results showed that the prevalence of risk factors for coronary artery disease was significantly higher in the group of men who had worked in the asbestos vermiculite mine than in the group of men who had worked in the vermiculite mine that did not contain asbestos.

- Research from the University of Illinois at Chicago (UIC) suggests that the use of a single, standardized, and validated instrument to assess the prevalence of mental health problems in a community is essential for the development of effective mental health services. The UIC researchers found that the use of a single, standardized, and validated instrument to assess the prevalence of mental health problems in a community is essential for the development of effective mental health services.
