

ANATOMY AND PHYSIOLOGY CAT DISSECTION

INTRODUCTION

To conclude our study of anatomy and physiology, we will dissect a cat. Through this dissection we will be able to observe all of the systems we have discussed in class. The cat is chosen for this unit because of its anatomy is similar to that of humans, and its size makes it easy to observe and dissect. There are several things that you must keep in mind to be successful in this dissection:

1. Read all directions carefully before you dissect. You cannot "take back" a cut made with your scalpel. Be sure you know what you are cutting before you cut. Care should be taken not to destroy delicate structures during the first stages of your work. Points will be given based on your dissection technique—you have practiced on other specimens and will now be graded on your ability to be precise and accurate.
2. Do not ask questions that can be answered by reading the directions. If you are unable to find a structure after exhausting all of your resources, then call on your teacher for assistance.
3. There may be some variation in the arrangement of blood vessels within your cat when compared to the diagrams provided. Drawings show the usual locations of these vessels. It may help to trace the path of known vessels when trying to identify others.
4. Pay careful attention to any instructions given by your teacher during the dissection. Some directions may be changed, and your grade will be penalized for not following instructions.
5. At the beginning of every period, it is your group's responsibility to gather the necessary materials. At the end of the period, it is your group's responsibility to clean up and put away materials correctly.
6. If there is an accident or injury in class, you must notify the teacher immediately. All other general lab safety rules must be followed.
7. All group members must wear the appropriate safety equipment at all times. This includes aprons, goggles, and gloves. Points will be deducted for each violation of this important safety rule.
8. At the end of each day, you will not only receive a stamp for showing Fisher the appropriate structures, but you are required to answer the Analysis Questions for that day's work. These should go in your notebook within the lab.

MATERIALS

Each group will have a dissecting pan and appropriate safety equipment for all group members. Each group will also receive a dissection packets to be used during class for reference.

At the end of each period, your group must have your materials cleaned and put away in the appropriate place in the classroom. Cats will be stored in their bags in the box on the counter. You may wish to mist your cat with water and cover with a damp paper towel before placing it in the bag to prevent it from drying out. Dissection tool kits will be stored in the cart at the front of the room. All safety equipment will be returned neatly in its tray and placed on the cart. All used gloves and paper towels must be placed in the trash, and desks should be wiped down with cleaning solution. Dissection lab manuals will be neatly stacked on the lab table.
