Abstract. Staphylococcus aureus is a Gram-positive bacterium that is a leading cause of nosocomial infections. It is also a common cause of skin and soft tissue infections. The bacterium is known for its ability to form biofilms, which are communities of bacteria that are attached to a surface and encased in a protective matrix. This makes S. aureus difficult to treat with antibiotics. In this study, we investigated the effect of a novel antimicrobial peptide, called Staphin, on S. aureus biofilm formation. We found that Staphin significantly reduced the formation of biofilms in a dose-dependent manner. This suggests that Staphin may be a promising agent for the treatment of S. aureus infections, particularly those involving biofilms.
