Deforestation In Ghana Deforestation In Ghana:

Deforestation in Ghana Michael S. Asante, 2002 Deforestation in Ghana Samuel Amos Abanyie, Carleton University. Dissertation. International Affairs, 1993 Forest Protection in Ghana William Hawthorne, M. Abu-Juam, 1995 Forest management in Ghana is in a transition period This report looks at the historical background and forest condition today summarizes a recent botanical survey and offers recommendations for a new management regime given the seriously threatened state of many forest reserves Energy and Deforestation in Ghana Iddrisu Adam, 1997 This thesis explores the question of the links between woodfuel use and deforestation in rural Ghana Using two villages Chamba and Nsuta in the two main vegetation zones in Ghana savannah and forests regions as case studies the central issues of access to and use of wood as energy either in the basic form or in the processed form as charcoal and how these are linked to forest depletion and environmental degradation are explored Whilst factors as such as high population growth rate poverty inappropriate agricultural policies and practices and logging are important in the debate over deforestation the exploitation of wood for domestic energy stands out as the main destroyer of forests in Ghana The author is of the conviction that unless immediate steps are taken to remedy the situation Ghana and indeed most of Sub Sahara Africa are headed for a real environmental and energy crisis Based on field research the author makes some specific recommendations including the introduction and promotion of more fuel efficient stoves the promotion of a tree planting culture the establishment of village woodlots rural electrification and involving rural people in the management of established woodlots These recommendations emphasise the protection and expansion of existing forests as against advocating the introduction of more sophisticated energy alternatives because realistically most rural households cannot afford these alternatives The key therefore to ensuring a steady supply of household energy is to focus on protecting and expanding Ghana's forests Impact of Deforestation on Medicinal Plants in Ghana Emmanuel Boon, Albert Ahenkan, 2008 Research Paper postgraduate from the year 2008 in the subject Forestry Forestry Economics Vrije University Brussel Human Ecology Department 52 entries in the bibliography language English abstract The role of medicinal plants in traditional health care delivery in Ghana cannot be overemphasized More than 250 indigenous trees and plants with healing properties have been scientifically catalogued in Ghana Unfortunately the very foundation upon which the medicinal plant species and the traditional health care system survive is threatened by deforestation The rate of deforestation has increased by 50% over the last ten years according to the UN Food and Agriculture Organization FAO The current area of intact forest is now estimated at between 10.9 and 11.8% of the original cover and 6.9% of the country's total area Deforestation is changing the habitats of disease carrying insects and creating conditions that may help to spread malaria river blindness and other devastating illnesses Moreover since the majority of the rural poor in Ghana depends on traditional medicine for their health care needs the present high rate of deforestation will have a detrimental effect on the health care delivery system in the country Important plant species will be lost to deforestation unless urgent measures are taken This paper examines the impact of deforestation on medicinal plants in Ghana

Managing the Environmental Crisis in Ghana Kwasi Nyamekye, 2014-11-19 Due to the strong inroads that Western scientism and Western Christianity have made in Africa as a result of colonialism post colonial African governments have tended to rely solely on Western scientific conservation epistemologies and models to the neglect of those of the Indigenous African peoples in addressing their environmental problems However there is enough evidence that neither modern scientific nor indigenous epistemologies and modes of addressing current ecological problems are

Forest Fringe Livelihoods at the Edge of Deforestation in Ghana Peter Dok Tindan, 2013 Research and policy on deforestation has often asserted it as evil because of the long term environmental implications for sustainable development evident in global warming biodiversity loss and soil degradation While this is true it is undeniable forest degradation and deforestation has contributed tremendously to the development of households livelihoods income and employment and social amenities for the sustenance of forest fringe communities Considering the negative consequences albeit socio economic benefits this current research has provides a holistic discussion on the implications of deforestation on forest fringe livelihoods in Ghana and has rather asserted deforestation as a necessary evil The findings are fashioned on the tripartite relationship between development environment and management the major tenets of sustainable development The book is useful for researchers and professionals in forest governance who seek to ensure sustainable forest management is a collaborative activity through broad public participation of all stakeholders in decision making and policy design and implementation

Reframing Deforestation James Fairhead, Melissa Leach, 2003-09-02 This study reviews how West African deforestation is represented and the evidence which informs deforestation orthodoxy On a country by country basis covering Sierra Leone Liberia Cote D Ivoire Ghana Togo and Benin and using historical and social anthropological evidence the authors evaluate this orthodox critically Reframing Deforestation suggests that the scale of deforestation wrought by West African farmers during the twentieth century has been vastly exaggerated The authors argue that global analyses have unfairly stigmatised West Africa and obscured its more sustainable even landscape enriching practices Stressing that dominant policy approaches in forestry and conservation require major rethinking worldwide Reframing Deforestation illustrates that more realistic assessments of forest cover change and more respectful attention to local knowledge and practices are necessary bases for effective and appropriate environmental policies

Sustainable Forestry Challenges for Developing Countries Matti Palo, G. Mery, 2012-12-06 This book is an outcome of a research project on Sustainable Forestry and the Environment in Developing Countries The project has been run by Metsantutki muslaitos METLA the Finnish Forest Research Institute since 1987 and will be completed this year A major output by this project has so far been a report in three volumes on Deforestation or development in the Third World The purpose of our multidisciplinary research project is to generate new knowl edge about the causes of deforestation its scenarios and consequences More knowledge is needed for more effective efficient and equitable public policy both at the national and international levels in supporting sustainable forestry in developing countries. Our project has specifically focused on 90 tropical countries as one group and on three subgroups by continents as well as the three case study countries: the Philippines, Ethiopia, and Chile. The University of Joensuu has been our active partner in the Philippine study. We have complemented the three cases by the analyses of Brazil and Indonesia, the two largest tropical forest owning countries. Some other interesting country studies were annexed to complement our book both by geography and expertise. The United Nations University World Institute for Development Economics Research (UNU-WIDER) in Helsinki, Finland, has also been partly engaged. Most of the results from its project on 'The Forest in the South and North in Context of Global Warming' will, however, be published later in a separate book.
