

Here, the spool in the remote valve has been returned to neutral.

The pressure that was directed to the right end of the pressure-flow compensator spool is now drained back through the orifice into sump. When the pressure acting against the pressure flow compensator spool reaches two-hundred-and-fifty PSI, the spool moves to the right against spring tension.

As the compensator spool moves to the right, it uncovers a passage so that the pressure, which has been created in the pump discharge cavity, is channeled to the cam plate control piston.

The piston moves against its spring and causes the cam plate in the pump to stroke back to a near zero displacement angle.

We have returned to the low pressure standby position. The spool will modulate back and forth to maintain a constant two-hundred-and-fifty PSI in the discharge circuit of the pump.

Despite all of the ever-changing hydraulic demands on an agricultural tractor . . . this system is constantly monitoring its own pressure, flow and load - and adjusting its performance accordingly . . . for maximum efficiency.

As a result, you get faster response . . . longer pump life . . . more efficient usage of horsepower . . . and greater fuel economy.

That's performance! . . . That's the Case Control Hydraulic System.
