Sickness Unto Death Søren Kierkegaard, 2013-01-28

Man is spirit But what is spirit Spirit is the self But what is the self The self is a relation which relates itself to its own self or it is that in the relation which accounts for it that the relation relates itself to its own self the self is not the relation but consists in the fact that the relation relates itself to its own self Man is a synthesis of the infinite and the finite of the temporal and the eternal of freedom and necessity in short it is a synthesis cornerstones of Kierkegaard's reputation as a writer and thinker the book is also a masterclass in the art of interpretation In critical thinking interpretation is all about defining and clarifying terms making sure that everyone is on the same page But it can also be about redefining terms showing old concepts in a new light by interpreting them in a certain way This skill is at the heart of The Sickness unto Death Kierkegaard's book focuses on the meaning of despair the sickness named in the title For Kierkegaard the key problem of existence was an individual's relationship with God and he defines true despair as equating to the idea of sin something that separates people from God or from the idea of a higher standard beyond ourselves Kierkegaard's interpretative journey into the ideas of despair sin and death is a Christian exploration of the place of the individual in the world But its interpretative skills inspired generations of philosophers of all stripes including notorious atheists like Jean Paul Sartre

The Sickness Unto Death Søren

Kierkegaard, Anti Climacus, 2014-11-03 Anti Climacus introduces the book with a reference to Gospel of John 11:4. This sickness is not unto death. This quotation comes from the story of Lazarus in which Jesus raises a man from the dead. However, Anti Climacus raises the question: would not this statement still be true even if Jesus had not raised Lazarus from the dead? While the human conception of death is the end, the Christian conception of death is merely another stop along the way of the eternal life. In this way, for the Christian, death is nothing to fear. The true Sickness unto Death, which does not describe physical but spiritual death, is something to fear according to Anti Climacus. This sickness unto death is what Kierkegaard calls despair. According to Kierkegaard, an individual is in despair if he does not align himself with God or God's plan for the self. In this way, he loses his self, which Kierkegaard defines as the relation relating itself to itself in the relation. Kierkegaard defines humanity as the tension between the finite and infinite and the possible and the necessary and is identifiable with the dialectical balancing act between these opposing features, the relation. While humans are inherently reflective and self-conscious beings, to become a true self, one must not only be conscious of the self but also be conscious of being aligned with a higher purpose, viz. God's plan for the Self. When one either denies this Self or the power that creates and sustains this Self, one is in despair. There are three kinds of despair presented in the book: being unconscious in despair of having a self, not wanting in despair to be oneself, and wanting in despair to be oneself. The first of these is described as inauthentic despair because this despair is born out of ignorance. In this state, one is unaware that one has a self separate from its finite reality. One does not realize that there is a God and accepts finitude because one is unaware of the possibility of being more inherent in selfhood. The second type of despair is refusing to accept the self outside of immediacy, only defining the self by immediate finite terms. This is the state in which one realizes that one has a self but wishes to lose this painful awareness by arranging one's finite life so as to make the realization unnecessary. This stage is loosely comparable to Sartre's bad faith. The third type is awareness of the Self but refusal to submit to the will of God. In this stage, one accepts the eternal and may or may not acknowledge the creator but refuses to accept an aspect of the Self that one in reality is, that is to say, the Self that one has been created to be. To not be in despair is to have reconciled the finite with the infinite, to exist in awareness of one's own self and of God. Specifically, Kierkegaard defines the opposite of despair as faith, which he describes by the following: In relating itself to itself and in willing to be itself, the self rests transparently in the power that established it.
