Capturing Education Envisioning Building Colleges:

Capturing Education Paul Boyer, 2015 Capturing Education examines the emergence and growth of the first tribal colleges. Based on extended interviews with more than a dozen founders, long-serving presidents, and non-Indian advocates, it explores the motivations of early leaders. It also describes how they overcame widespread assumptions that Indians did not need a college education or were not capable of running their own colleges. This story, rarely told, is filled with moments of drama as leaders describe how they fought to gain funding and respect. Against the odds, the men and women featured in these pages demonstrate how a good idea, when pursued with energy and idealism, can gain support and succeed. Book cover

Without Destroying Ourselves John A. Goodwin, 2022-03 Without Destroying Ourselves is an intellectual history of Native activism seeking greater access to and control of higher education in the twentieth century. John A. Goodwin traces themes of Henry Roe Cloud's Ho-Chunk vision for Native intellectual leadership and empowerment in the early 1900s to the later missions of tribal colleges and universities, TCUs, and education-based self-determination movements of the 1960s onward. Vital to Cloud's work was the idea of how to build from Native identity and adapt without destroying that identity. As the central themes of the movement for Native control in higher education developed over the course of several decades, a variety of Native activists carried Cloud's vision forward. Goodwin explores how Elizabeth Bender, Cloud, Ojibwe D. Arcy McNickle, Salish Kootenai Jack Forbes, Powhatan Renap, Delaware Lenape, and others built on and contributed to this common thread of Native intellectual activism. Goodwin demonstrates that Native activism for self-determination was never snuffed out by the swing of the federal government's pendulum away from tribal governance and toward termination. Moreover, efforts for Native control in education remained a vital aspect of that activism. Without Destroying Ourselves documents this period through the full accreditation of TCUs in the late 1970s and reinforces TCUs' continuing relevance in confronting the unique needs and challenges of Native communities today. Religion and the American University James W.

Institutional Diversity in American Postsecondary Education Tiffany J. Davis,Shelley Price-Williams,Pietro A. Sasso,2024-07-01 The glossy and polished college videos view books and websites catered to the marketplace of students Some recruitment brochures often discuss famous alumni athletics championships and a vibrant student life Particularly at research universities marketing materials may even focus on entrepreneurs and medical discoveries These types of colleges along with others compromise the marketplace of higher education in which different types of colleges exist across a spectrum of missions institutional sagas and histories Within this marketplace is a bewildering and disorienting catalog of different institutional types and classifications This marketplace also exists within a conglomerate of rankings and ratings that are ordered by US News World Report and Petersons Such rankings are often connected to a larger quest for prestige and primarily facilitated by these private sector publications but are juxtaposed to the higher education industry created Carnegie Classification system The Carnegie Classification system was created as an approach to differentiate the more than 4 000 institutions by size mission and scope for research and policy analysis However this system is also integrated into broader hierarchies of accreditation and funding However the continued reclassification of the system in 2005 2010 and the addition of new categories in 2018 such as doctoral professional has advanced to call attention to and emphasize the importance of the considerable institutional diversity of U S higher education 2005 p 52 However these typologies do not fully describe or conceptualize the organizational administrative culture or student experiences of each of these typologies The rankings guides and the Carnegie Classification systems often overlook more nuanced institutional types such as faith based or works colleges They also overlook the role and impact of Minority Serving Institutions MSI This lack of recognition often facilitates continued invisibility for different institutional types and the diverse multiple student populations they may educate and support Therefore this edited text seeks to expand and further the Carnegie Classification system typology and beyond the private sector rankings This text is a response to a call for existential exploration as an attempt to critically revivify our understanding of the various institutional types and is inspired by the words of David Thorton Moore in which it might be heartening to see a cadre of faculty and critical scholars facilitate a form of discourse in which teachers and students conduct an unfettered investigation of social institutions power relations and value commitment In this text the authors describe and problematize the various institutional types as defined by accreditation Carnegie classification and private sector rankings

The SAGE Encyclopedia of Higher Education Miriam E. David, Marilyn J. Amey, 2020-05-21 Higher Education is in a state of ferment People are seriously discussing whether the medieval ideal of the university as being excellent in all areas makes sense today given the number of universities that we have in the world Student fees are changing the orientation of students to the system The high rate of non repayment of fees in the UK is provoking difficult questions about whether the current system of funding makes sense There are disputes about the ratio of research to teaching and further discussions about the international delivery of courses
