

Cochlear implants

While hearing aids can only amplify sound, a cochlear implant transforms sound into electrical energy that is used to stimulate auditory nerves in the inner ear.

1

Sounds are picked up by a microphone that is mounted on the external ear piece.

2

The speech processor digitizes the sound into signals and sends the signals to the transmitting coil.

Controls for processor are on the bottom of ear piece.

3

A transmitting coil sends the coded signals as radio waves to the cochlear implant under the skin.

4

The internal processor is placed in the mastoid bone behind the ear. The cochlear implant delivers electrical energy to an array of electrodes, which has been inserted into the cochlea.

5

The electrodes along the array stimulate the remaining auditory nerve fibers in the cochlea.

6

The resulting electrical sound information is sent through the auditory system to the brain.
