

Evolution has not taught koalas to jump. An animal called a possum helps to break down the leaves and keep the koala from being harmed by the possum. Koalas are nocturnal, which means they are awake at night and sleep during the day. Koalas sleep in the branches of trees for up to eighteen hours a day. Koalas need a lot of energy to digest the eucalyptus leaves. Sleeping is the best way to save their energy.

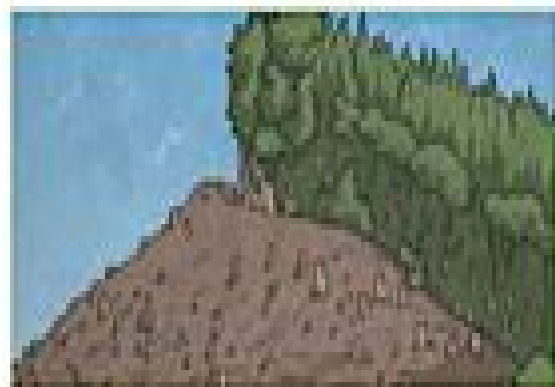

If you're going to feed them, you'll need a yellow cup and have them clean their drink too, just like humans. The possums usually live on their back. They communicate by different noises, making like a loud and angry. They make noise to warn their baby when not to come get out of the branches. Koalas

Introduction

Koalas are very adorable animals. In Australia, conservation groups want the government to take action to protect the koala. The Australian Koala Foundation estimates that there are 30,000 koalas across the world. Koalas believe that climate change and deforestation are responsible for the declining number of koalas. Climate change is changing the weather and losing temperature of the earth. That causes up to climate change is caused by human activities, such as burning fossil fuels. Recently, koalas have experienced deforestation, resulting in 20% rainfall, which has caused many koalas to die of dehydration. The reason they did not feel enough water.

Koalas

The koala is native to Australia. Koalas live in eucalyptus forests and woodlands. Wild koalas are found in the eastern states of Queensland, New South Wales, Victoria and South Australia. Koalas are sometimes called 'koala bears'. They are not bears but are actually marsupials, which means they carry their young in a pouch. A kangaroo is also a marsupial.

A baby koala is called a joey. Joey are born blind and without ears. They look like pink jelly beans. The female koala carries her baby in her pouch for about six months. The joey drinks only its mother's milk while in its mother's pouch. Once strong enough, the young joey rides on its mother's back or clings to her belly until it is one year old. It only uses the pouch to feed on eucalyptus leaves. At one year old, the joey leaves its mother. The joey is a fully-grown koala by about four years old. Koalas usually live to ten or twelve years of age.

Appearance

Koalas have a thick coat of woolly, grey fur with a cream-colored chest. They have a wide, rounded nose; small yellow eyes and large, fluffy ears. Koalas have sharp claws which they use to help them climb trees. They have five digits (fingers) on each front paw. Two of their digits act like thumbs. This helps them to hold firmly on to the branches and to grip their food. Koalas use their back paws as gripping paws. They communicate with each other by making different noises. The most surprising noise sounds like a loud snore.

Diet

Koalas are herbivores (plant eaters). They eat eucalyptus leaves. An adult koala can eat up to one kilogram of eucalyptus leaves each night. Koalas are joey eaters and will choose the tastiest leaves from the trees where they live. Koalas do not need to consume much water. Instead, they get most of their moisture from eating eucalyptus leaves.
