Thompson, 2018-07-24 This volume of three books presents recent advances in modelling planning and evaluating city logistics for sustainable and liveable cities based on the application of ICT Information and Communication Technology and ITS Intelligent Transport Systems It highlights modelling the behaviour of stakeholders who are involved in city logistics as well as planning and managing policy measures of city logistics including cooperative freight transport systems in public private partnerships Case studies of implementing and evaluating city logistics measures in terms of economic social and environmental benefits from major cities around the world are also given Customer Benefits in City Logistics Henrik Johansson, 2020-03-20 Urban Consolidation Centre UCC is a city logistics initiative that has the potential to increase the efficiency of urban freight delivery systems while reducing negative environmental and social effects caused by freight vehicles One important issue that have hindered longevity of this initiative is its viability both the financial viability and acceptance from affected stakeholders also called UCC customers The UCC customers in focus in this thesis are receivers of goods and municipalities To satisfy both types of stakeholders their requests and in particular the benefits they can gain from using UCCs need to be studied The types of benefits to be given priority differ between the stakeholders where municipalities strive towards more societal benefits and the main goals of receivers are an increase in efficiency and financial sustainability In response the purpose of this thesis is to deepen the understanding of benefits for customers of UCCs with a particular focus on customer needs and benefits that UCCs can provide This thesis consists of five appended papers each of which uses a different methodology The methodologies applied in the papers include a multiple interview study of five UCCs a surveybased interview study of retail stores and a case study of an operating UCC Regarding customer needs this thesis takes the customer perspective in order to identify needs that UCCs can meet The results presented in this thesis also highlight the importance for UCCs to give priority to meeting customer needs that stem from some type of problem Regarding benefits that UCCs can provide the thesis suggests how different types of benefits can be distinguished This can give guidance to UCC operators regarding which benefits should be given priority in communication with UCC customers However the results highlight that it is also important to understand the situation of the customer to be able to communicate the most relevant benefits that UCCs can provide Furthermore the results illustrate different improvement areas that can affect the benefits for UCC customers These identified areas are improved understanding by both UCCs and its customers of each other's operation communication developing a more holistic view for UCC customers and developing new UCC services to match customer needs The results provide a foundation for customer needs that UCCs can meet and the benefits that UCCs can provide This foundation can be important for UCC customers to gain a better understanding of what a UCC is and how it can affect their operation something that this thesis contributes towards It can also assist initiators of UCCs to determine which customer needs they should focus on Lastly the results and contribution also address the potential role of municipalities and it is argued that their role should change from a more supportive role to that of a paying UCC customer All of these aspects can increase the probability that a UCC when established becomes viable
