

Chapter 10:

- DEFINITION: Macroeconomics is the study of the economy as a whole, its goal is to explain economic changes that affect households, firms, and markets
- GDP's role is to determine if the economy is doing good or bad
 - GDP measures the total income of everyone in the economy as well as the total expenditure on the economic output of goods and services
 - GDP measures both total income and total expenditure in an economy because these two things are the same - for the economy as a whole: income=expenditure
 - This is true because every transaction has two parties: buyer and seller, this becomes clear in the circular flow diagram

The Circular-Flow Diagram

- GDP measures the flow of money - this can be done by adding up the total expenditure by households or by adding up the total income (wages, rent, profit) paid by firms
- DEFINITION: Gross domestic product is the market value of all final goods and services produced within a country in a given time period
 - "of all" → includes the market value of the housing services provided by the stock of housing, for rental, this is easily calculated but for homeowners, the government calculates as if the owner is renting to himself. Furthermore, GDP does not include items sold illicitly or items produced and consumed at home
 - "Final" → intermediate goods are not included because they are already a part of the value of the final product
 - "Produced" → GDP only takes into account items being produced now, not those that involve items already produced, like selling a used car
- $GDP(Y) = C + I + G + NX$ (M-N)
 - C → Consumption: the spending by households on goods and services (with the exception of buying a new house)
 - I → Investment: the purchase of goods and services (capital goods) that will be used to produce other goods in the future, this includes business and residential capital as well as inventories
