Time Stood Still

It was a bustling port on the Bay of Naples on the coast of Italy and on the morning of August 24, AD 79, the people of Pompeii woke for the last time in their beautiful town.

To the beauty of Pompeii, which stood behind the coastal city of Naples, the people of Pompeii did not know that a volcano was actually a few miles away. That day, first, and then, a cloud of smoke and ash came out of the volcano. It blocked the sun and the trees. Next, volcanic ash fell on the town. Some people thought that it was just a bad day.

Not until the town was almost buried, then, did the people realize that there was volcanic ash and red-hot lava coming out of the town. When the lava hit Pompeii, the people were killed. The lava cooled into hard rock.

That day, the people who escaped returned weeks later to find their homes buried under the hard volcanic rock. They tried to dig them out, but the lava was too hard.

In the 1800s when archaeologists started to dig, they found that the lava had protected the city, leaving whole houses and streets clear. Scientists could make casts of the bodies of the people who died. They even showed the expression on their faces in Pompeii.

A volcano is a control, usually with a bad result. A volcano is a control, usually with a bad result.
