Catoctin Furnace Elizabeth Y. Anderson, 1982 Hopewell Village Joseph E. Walker, 2016-11-11 Before 1840 the American iron industry consisted in the main of small furnaces obliged by their need of the charcoal they used for fuel to locate in areas of heavy forest Around these isolated furnaces grew communities of workers and their families and of the farmers and service people who supplied their needs In hundreds of forest clearings there could be found rural industrial settlements as distinctive in form and as important in product as the New England town or the Southern plantation Hopewell Village tells the story of one such community which from 1771 to 1883 made iron in Southern Berks County Pennsylvania What little has been written about the iron villages has concentrated largely on the techniques of furnace operation This book is concerned with the lives of the people of the iron plantations from the wealthy ironmaster to the youngest indentured servant and how they interacted with each other and with the outside world in work religion education and play Special attention has been given to the lives of minorities While every part of the book is documented for the scholar reader the style of writing is plain enough to be read with meaning by those who have little background in the techniques either of the iron industry or historiography Containing much original source material tables tabulations and numerous photographs Hopewell Village should be of interest to students of industrial history transportation labor relations and race relations as well as to the

Joseph E. Walker, 1974 Before 1840 the American iron industry consisted in the main of small furnaces obliged by their need of the charcoal they used for fuel to locate in areas of heavy forest Around these isolated furnaces grew communities of workers and their families and of the farmers and service people who supplied their needs In hundreds of forest clearings there could be found rural industrial settlements as distinctive in form and as important in product as the New England town or the Southern plantation Hopewell Village tells the story of one such community which from 1771 to 1883 made iron in Southern Berks County Pennsylvania What little has been written about the iron villages has concentrated largely on the techniques of furnace operation This book is concerned with the lives of the people of the iron plantations from the wealthy ironmaster to the youngest indentured servant and how they interacted with each other and with the outside world in work religion education and play Special attention has been given to the lives of minorities While every part of the book is documented for the scholar reader the style of writing is plain enough to be read with meaning by those who have little background in the techniques either of the iron industry or historiography Containing much original source material tables tabulations and numerous photographs Hopewell Village should be of interest to students of industrial history transportation labor relations and race relations as well as to the general reader of American history Hopewell Furnace Walter David Lewis, Walter Edward Hugins, 1985-04 Describes an ironmaking community in 18th and 19th century America An overview of the young iron making industry is presented in part one Part two recounts the history of the workers and ironmaking
