Every science mathematical, physical, or biological has its postulates as the foundation of its structure. Psychology as a science has also its own assumptions which have to be clearly formulated. The object of the first part of this volume is the unravelling of the principal concepts and hypotheses which form the basis of the study of mental phenomena. All through the domain of the sciences there is a vast movement for the search of fundamental concepts and for the close investigation of such concepts. Even such an exact science as mathematics has felt this spirit of examination of its fundamental assumptions, axioms, and postulates. Men like Lobatchevsky, Bolyai, Riemann, and others have given the start, and a number of mathematicians have recently followed in their footsteps with the result of getting a wider horizon and of opening unknown regions. The same we find in the case of physical sciences such as physics, mechanics, and chemistry. Mach, Poincaré, Ostwald, Pearson, and others have contributed to this spirit of investigation in the domain of physical sciences. This spirit of inquiry has become of late specially intensified by the revolutionary discoveries of radio-active bodies.
