

Design Process 2 Urban studies

Johnson's property follows a series of "personal" and cultural references which guide the audience deep inside of his formal language. This is more clearly perceived in the master plan and the urban-scale studies. The ideas, metaphors and conceptual references translated into a simplification of signs that give shape to new urban structures.

In the concept of a "site as device" under the symbolic fragments of the memory of Philadelphia, Paoli recorded that road collage points with accelerated temporal perceptions that modify every perspective intervention. The master plan for Ground Zero keeps alive the memory of the disaster as its reference in the symbols of Montecarlo as the historic tragedy struck, in the Declaration of Independence and in the Liberty of West Virginia. While the first urban drawings depict the spatial movement in which the lines lose themselves in the complexity of a quasi-abstract diagram, in later plans the design takes shape whenever which allows to build the "flow" of the plan.
