

China's Maritime Disputes in the East and South China Seas

Michael D. Swaine

April 04, 2013

Testimony: U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission

Maritime disputes constitute the single likeliest source of instability and military conflict with China, says Michael Swaine. In testimony before the U.S.-China Economic and Security Review Commission, he explains the primary drivers of tension in the East and South China Seas and identifies steps Washington can take to reduce the risk of hostilities.

Policy Recommendations:

- Support a code of conduct: Washington should strongly encourage development of a binding code of conduct governing behavior in contested waters.
- Pursue quiet diplomacy: The United States should engage in a sustained diplomatic campaign emphasizing close personal interactions with all parties and a low public profile.
- Encourage joint development of resources: Washington should encourage the establishment of a multinational joint venture capable of adjudicating exploration rights and addressing environmental concerns.
- Maintain perspective: The United States should keep maritime disputes in perspective, recognizing their deep historical roots and resisting the temptation to view them as a barometer of the U.S.-China strategic relationship.

Swaine concludes, "There is no quick fix or silver bullet for resolving these complex and longstanding maritime disputes. It will require patience, sustained effort, and a very deft hand on the part of the United States."

Introduction

China's disputes with other states over territorial sovereignty and resource claims in the East and South China Seas constitute one of three related but distinct categories of maritime disputes or sets of concerns between Beijing and other nations.

Aside from the Taiwan issue (which is arguably a maritime dispute of sorts, but not the focus of this hearing), maritime sovereignty and resource disputes center on (a) the Sino-Japanese imbroglio concerning both overlapping maritime resource claims and sovereign control over the Senkaku/Diaoyu Islands northeast of Taiwan, and (b) the complex web of disputes between Beijing and several Southeast Asian entities (Vietnam, the Philippines, Malaysia, Brunei, and Taiwan) over many islands, atolls, reefs, and shoals in the South China Sea.

Ocean Governance and Conflict in the East and South China Sea Christian Schultheiss, 2025-10-01 This book tells the story of the negotiations between China Japan Taiwan the Philippines Vietnam and other Southeast Asian countries about the East and South China Sea disputes Tapping into formerly classified and newly available primary sources the book meticulously tracks these negotiations and their sudden U turns It is a story about the promises and perils of cooperation as much about pragmatic gradual and surprisingly resilient approaches to conflict resolution and ocean governance as it is about the expansion of states bargaining power through institutions The book hinges on the question of when and why disputing parties reach agreement on joint oil and gas development fisheries and codes of conduct and when and why negotiations end in impasse It is the first comprehensive and theoretically informed study of decades long dispute settlement efforts in a central region of the Indo Pacific where the expansion of China challenges the law of the sea and regional security

The Law of the Sea and Maritime Boundary Disputes in Areas of Hydrocarbon Potential Vivek

Chandra, 2023-09-22 The United Nations Convention on the Law of Sea UNCLOS is hailed as one of the most significant multilateral legal agreements executed in the past few decades. However, its shortcomings are neither trivial nor inconsequential, especially regarding maritime boundary disputes involving hydrocarbon resources. This monograph examines the relationship between UNCLOS and maritime boundaries in five non-polar regions encompassing almost 90% of global unresolved disputes involving offshore hydrocarbon development. The regions, which include the eastern Mediterranean, the Caspian Sea, the Persian Gulf, northeast Asia, and the South China Sea, were chosen for their oil and gas resources potential and recent military skirmishes that have the potential to lead to wider regional confrontations. The book addresses each region's maritime boundary status in the context of specific articles within UNCLOS that have been exploited by disputing states to justify their overlapping claims. The history and future applicability of multilateral Joint Development Area agreements for each region are evaluated for their potential to provide a cooperative solution to resolve ongoing tensions. Highlighting the limitations of current gun boat diplomacy, the monograph makes practical suggestions for new paradigms for resolving outstanding disputes, promoting lasting peace, and generating economic benefits resulting from resource development.
