

Chapter 15: The Federal Courts - Guided Reading Questions

Chapter 15, Part 1 (15.1 - 15.4)

1. What is the difference between a criminal and civil case? Give an example of each.

Criminal law case is when an individual is charged for violating specific laws. A civil law case involves a dispute between 2 parties (one may be government) over different matters such as contracts, property, divorce, or property damage.

2. Why are there state courts and federal courts? Which principle of democracy does this illustrate?

Cases that deal with burglary, and civil cases such as divorce start and end in the state, not the federal courts.

3. What are the two parties in a case called? How are court cases named?

Plaintiff and defendant. The plaintiff is first, and the defendant is after. (Example: Plaintiff v. Defendant)

4. What is a class action lawsuit?

A class action lawsuit is when a small number of people sue on behalf of all people in similar circumstances.

5. Explain how interest groups use the court system. You may provide an example to illustrate this.

Interest groups seek out litigant who has strong cases that they can support.

6. Explain what an amicus brief is, and how they are used.

Amicus brief is a brief interest groups use in an attempt to influence the courts decision, raise additional points of view, and info that is non-contained in briefs for official parties in the case.

7. What is the difference between original and appellate jurisdiction?

Original jurisdiction hears a case first, usually in trial. These courts determine facts about a case, whether it's a criminal charge of a civil suit. More than 90% of court cases begin and end in the court of original jurisdiction. Appellate jurisdiction appeal on a lower court. Appellate jurisdictions only review the legal issues involved. At state level, the appellate process normally ends with the state's highest court of appeal, usually decided by the supreme court.

8. What type of jurisdiction do federal District Courts have?
