- Asynchronous interview: a type of technologically mediated interview in which the 2 parties can participate at different times (e.g. email)
- Fact checking: researchers reviewing of interview or focus group transcripts for accuracy
- Focus group interview: a group interview with 3 to 12 participants; it is marked by guided group discussion, question and answer, interactive dialogue, and other activities
- Formulations: statements through which speakers paraphrase prior utterances and in this way preserve, delete, and transform information produced by other speakers
- In vivo speech: speech that is genuine and specific to a group in its local context
- Mediated interview: interview that is not taken face to face but rather via technological media such as telephone, a computer, or a hand held device
- Polyphonic interviewing: the multiple voiced of the respondents are reported separately rather than collapsed, and differences in perspectives are highlighted rather than glossed over
- Remedial pedagogical interview: a type of interview developed by Pamela Luften-Sandvik which provides support and education when appropriate
- Synchronous interview: a type of technological mediated interview in which all parties meet and talk together at the same time; it is similar to the face to face interview and can be conducted through telephone, webcam conversations, and internet text based chat
