

Coding for Treatment Devices in Radiation Oncology

Coding for Treatment Devices

Treatment devices, designs, and construction may be charged during a course of therapy when documentation substantiates multiple volumes of interest/ports, the use of custom-made devices, and/or the necessity of replacement devices. Providers should bill for devices at the beginning of the treatment course and then may bill again later in the course of treatment when additional or new devices are required.

Payment for one set of treatment devices may be allowed per separate port when radiation therapy is started. However, a pair of mirror-imaged opposing ports, ports that direct parallel beams such as anterior-posterior or left lateral-right lateral pairs are considered, for billing purposes, to be one port. This is true regardless of the level of complexity of the devices used to create the ports. However, if these devices are significantly different from each other, then the contractor may allow payment for each of the pair Coding for Treatment Devices.
