Learning to read words with accuracy, fluency, and expression are pre-cursor skills to being able to understand a text. As a parent, you can best support your child's comprehension by encouraging your child to read for a purpose, re-read to improve fluency, and discuss the text throughout the reading.

Family members can support a child's literacy development by taking turns reading, letting the child echo the reading, and pointing out letters or words the child might know. Be patient as your child struggles to sound out or decode new words. Encourage persistence and reading to understand.
