ABSTRACT

As a class of thermosetting resins with exceptional overall performance, cyanate esters have not received sufficient attention for their potential applications in 3D printing. In this paper, polytetrafluoroethylene micropowder is used for the first time as a thixotropic agent to regulate the rheological properties of liquid bisphenol E cyanate monomer for direct ink writing of cyanate ester resins in 3D printing. Due to their appropriate compatibility, the mixed inks exhibit high storage modulus and shear-thinning behavior, enabling the printed structures to maintain their shape well during printing and subsequent curing processes. The printed samples have good mechanical strength and excellent thermal stability. At the same time, the presence of polytetrafluoroethylene endows the composite materials with low dielectric constant and hydrophobicity. The latter property leads to high hygrothermal stability of the composites. The cyanate ester-polytetrafluoroethylene composite developed here offers a reliable method for 3D printing high performance cyanate ester, efficiently enhances the processibility of the cyanate ester based materials.
