Color Vision

We perceive color because the cones respond to the entire visible spectrum of light, and a few rods. The cones are actually frequency-tuned, responding best to a particular color (red, green, or blue). These different frequencies of light are sent by the brain to the different cones, which then send the color information to the brain. Light is just a small part of the electromagnetic spectrum. Other portions of the spectrum include gamma rays, x-rays, ultraviolet (UV), infrared (IR), microwaves, and

Subtractive Color Mixing
Subtractive color mixing is the process of subtracting colors from white light. The primary colors are cyan, magenta, and yellow. The secondary colors are red, green, and blue. The tertiary colors are orange, purple, and brown. The quaternary colors are black, white, and gray.

... is called the external method of value production.

None of these values are rounded up.

Use of light leads by testing one of the three additive primary colors in equal amounts to the additive secondary colors. Use this procedure to determine the additive secondary color of the pairs of additive primary colors of light. Use each color in the table below, as a color (from left to right) and the third color must be turned off.
