To help the banks keep your money safe, we need to verify your identity. Federal law requires us to collect, verify, and record information that identifies each person that opens an account. What this means for you: when you open an account, we will ask for your name, a street address, date of birth, and an identification number, such as a Social Security Number. That Federal law requires us to collect. We may also ask to see your photo's license or other identifying documents that we allow us to identify you. We appreciate your cooperation.

During the application process, please do not verify your identity using commercially available resources containing information that public records, other financial institutions and consumer reporting agencies
