

Chapter 18

CONCEPT 18.1: Bacteria often respond to environmental change by regulating transcription

Natural selection has favored bacteria that express only the genes that encode products needed by the cell

A cell can regulate the production of enzymes by feedback inhibition or by gene regulation

In feedback inhibition, the end product of a metabolic pathway shuts down further synthesis of the product by inhibiting enzyme activity

Cells can adjust the production level of certain enzymes by regulating expression of the genes encoding the enzymes

The control of enzyme production is thus at the level of transcription

One basic mechanism for this type of regulation of groups of genes is called the operon model

Operons: The Basic Concept

A cluster of functionally related genes can be coordinately controlled by a single "on-off switch"

The switch is a segment of DNA called an operator, positioned within the promoter or, sometimes, between the promoter and enzyme-coding genes

An operon is the entire stretch of DNA that includes the operator, the promoter, and the genes that they control

The operon can be switched off by a protein repressor

The repressor prevents gene transcription by binding to the operator and blocking RNA polymerase

The repressor is the product of a separate regulatory gene, located some distance from the operon itself

The repressor can be in an active or inactive form, depending on the presence of other molecules

A corepressor is a molecule that cooperates with a repressor protein to switch an operon off

For example, E. coli can synthesize the amino acid tryptophan when it has insufficient tryptophan

By default, the trp operon is on and the genes for tryptophan synthesis are transcribed

When tryptophan is present, it binds to the trp repressor protein, which turns the operon off

The repressor is in the active state only in the presence of its corepressor tryptophan

Thus the trp operon is turned off (repressed) if tryptophan levels are high
